Water Firm Makes a Splash!

A South London water firm – whose coolers were featured in the BBC television show The Apprentice - celebrated five years of service by expanding its operations.

The Water Delivery Company was initially set up in 2002 with one man, a couple of customers, a computer, two vans and a hatful of ideas.

Since then, the company has evolved and now employs 25 staff members and supplies thousands of UK customers.

They are just about to move into some brand new premises in Wimbledon, as they continue with their aim of making a big splash in the water cooler industry.

And talks are also being held in relation to the opening of a North London branch.

Head of Operations, Robert Laughton, said, “The most important thing about our company is our customers and fortunately, our recent customer survey this year virtually had a 100 per cent success rate.”

“We are always looking at ways of improving our service though and we are currently in the midst of setting up a company environmental policy.”

“The environment is naturally important to us and so is the local community that we work in. Recently we sponsored a race at the local greyhound stadium and plans are in motion to help our local school and our local bowls club.”

“We have come along way in a short period of time and I am very optimistic about the future,” he added.
